

CANNERS MAY SEEK REFUND FROM OTTAWA

VANCOUVER, B.C., Sept. 24.—Deputy by judgment of My Justice Department. In an supreme court at Victoria. In an unsuccessful prosecution of the Samoan cannery association for a fine of nearly $10,000,000 annual revenue from salmon exports, the government, the dominant fisheries department, might, as a result of its decision, be compelled to pay some fees which have been paid by the cannery association under apparently illegal exercises of federal power.

Lawyers Busy

The aspect of the situation is being followed by many law and legal advisers.

The cannery money thus involved runs into large figures.

Not previously attacked in all its aspects, the fisheries department has produced a large amount of material.

including the cannery industry, all kinds of documents and three cents a case for other salmon packers, and a total amount estimated at $1,000,000 during recent years.

To ask the dominion authorities to withdraw the tax would mean a strenuous fight.

Japanese Fish Rights

The Japanese have opened up another field for controversy. Many Japanese have applied for fishing licenses this season and 21 of these at least were held in Canada as of Sept. 1. The Japanese proceedings on behalf of these Japanese are now under advisement.

It is claimed that the Japanese claimed for the loss of profits which the fishermen would have earned if they had not been restricted.

In the meantime, it is learned here, the Japanese have submitted proposals to refer the question of the validity of the legislation to the supreme court of Canada for decision.

THEY ARE WORLD'S CHAMPIONS

A Bulletin reporter at Chicago says the Edmonton Commercial Graduates are the world's basketball champions. He would also like to have it known that they have been beaten in a series of games since then, when and where that was made known.

If any ladies' basketball team has won the world's championship, the Gators are the ones. They have won games for a world's champion ship played. The two titles which the ladies' game were so often are the international championships. When they brushed everything aside in the last five games, 1926, they actually won the world's championship, and were credited with this title.

The Gators won a series of games in 1925 by the Cleveland Newman Sterns. This was an exhibition tour, and there was no title at stake. In the first year, the Gators had seven wins and six losses, and these were by five points. Then the two teams moved on to New York, and the Gators were finished.

In the last two games, the Gators won by five points in each. The Gators have played here this spring; it was a series of games, not only for the championship, but for the understanding of the Gators' claim to the championship. The Newman Sterns had defeated all other contenders in the Gators' absence, and were the champions of the United States, Canada, Australia, Britain, and International houses.

In a two-game series, which was played at the local arena, the Gators won the first game, in both contests, winning the first game by fifteen points and coming back in the second they were out front again, and won by a clear margin of six points, and by twenty-one points.

If the Gators are world's champions, no other ladies' basketball team is.

After going through the tournament and the trials, the best about the best bats, two great women golfers, Mrs. Muriel Burns Horn and the national women's golf champion, who was decided Sunday, Sept. 25, at the Royal Canadian Burns Horn of Kitchener City, being the best golfer in the Province of Ontario.

Mrs. Burns Horn, member of the Ottawa Golf Club, was considered to have the best chance of any of the competitors, and she did not let her friends down.

She was the first woman to win a championship on many previous occasions.

All through the tournament the Canadian dominated the play, and with Miss Burns Horn, a brilliant golfer, these seem to be little odds against the other competitors. But that is golf. Just when you least expect the thing is when it comes.

It is the way it will slip through your fingers.

New Lancastrian, the French tennis player, is at present playing some exhibition matches in Canada. In Montreal, playing his first game, he beat Jack May, of the University, 6 to 3, and then paired with Jacques Dugay, of the University, and cup team, defeated Jack Wright, of the University, Alberta champion in 1925, 6 to 3, 6 to 4.

Wright, who is the champion of Ontario, is the one who is winning the tournaments in the U.S. and Canada, and he is due to play in Toronto next week.

Lancastrian is likely to appear in the Canadian Tennis Championships, which are certainly being given a big push by the Canadian, the greatest singles player in the country.

Apparently, Tilden is not quitting the game, nor is he the last to do so. The last to quit by Lancastrian in the U.S. last year, and he is due to play in Toronto next week.

Tilden is still to appear in the Canadian Tennis Championships, which are certainly being given a big push by the Canadian, the greatest singles player in the country.

Apparently, Tilden is not quitting the game, nor is he the last to do so. The last to quit by Lancastrian in the U.S. last year, and he is due to play in Toronto next week.

There is still a chance, however, that he will meet us here, as he was this year, and the possibility of his appearing here will meet with more success.

There is still just a chance that the Eskimos will be represented, and the local entry last season will be prepared to go ahead with another team.

Women May Lack the Spectacular Bravery Of a Lindbergh, But All Around Us Are Examples of a Quiet Courage That Goes on for Years Unrewarded and Unnoticed — Of Such Stuff Are Mothers of Heroes Made

A young girl whose eyes grew big and starry with hero-worship as she gazed about Lindbergh and Byrd and the other gallant adventurers of the air, said to me the other day:

"Why is it that we have so few women heroes? It is because we are too afraid to make one almost ashamed of being a woman!"

"There are two kinds of courage," I told her. "The hot courage that sends men to war, that dashes them into battle, that endures with comrade, the roar of cannon about them, the mad rush of a charge across a field, leaping from afar, ready to applaud the victor and pin the hero medal on his chest."

And there is the still courage that fights its battle in silence in lonely places, with none to see or know and no reward in sight. It is the quiet courage that one had the grit to stand at once like a good soldier without turning quitter.

And it is this cold, unspascular courage that mothers of heroes carry on in the face of discouragement, the courage to fight a battle that ends in defeat and which they will not receive even as honorable mention.

And you find this courage where you least expect it. I know a young girl who is a perfect specimen as far as appearance goes, of the sweetest, blushing face in an innate grace. Her scraggly little body is covered with cheap and inappropriate fluff, messy silk and glass beads.

"She works in a 5-and-10-cent store for a meagre wage. She has more than enough mind intelligence of much depth, but lacks the soul of a hero."

For several years ago, when her sister died leaving a handful of little children, whose worthless father had deserted them, she gathered the family together, she divides them with her sour food. She cooks and washes, and scrubs, and sews, and serves. For them she denies herself all the pleasures for which a girl is so hungry at time of life, and I think that girls hope on the battlefield.

A man who is poor and old and feeble often comes to see me. When I first knew her she was young and beautiful, and gay and laughing, but now she is old and wrinkled, and she has lost her smile, and was helped to bed.

He wanted to marry her, but his fortune led him to a far country and he never returned, and a helpless old mother whom she felt that she could not desert. Nor would she brighten her lover's days by telling him the truth, for she was afraid that he might not care taking care of the old people but of supporting them as well.

"They were querulous and fault-finding, and complained and nagged. He took a never-ending patience to put up with their constant quarrels, and their never ending chatter of bygone days, but for years and years and years, until her own health gave way, she never allowed him to go home again, for them and bore with them with a tenderness and a gentleness that never failed.

Her heart's medal is the breast of a man who risks his life for a minute to save another, but those who show the supreme courage are those who give their whole lives to others.

I know a woman whose death record is one of love. Husband and son, both died in a car accident, leaving her desolate and alone. For a while she was stunned. Then she gathered herself together and went to work, and she has been a comfort to many a widow shadow on the lives of those about her. She never speaks of her tragic past, but she is calm and serene, and she fills her place in the world with a quiet dignity.

"Only those most intrepid with her know that her wound has never healed, that every night her pillow is wet with secret tears and her own gravity causes her to those who left the world empty to her. And surely there is no braver greater than this, to smile about broken hearts."

I know a woman who married a man whom she adored with all the passion of a romantic soul and whom she endowed with every imaginable virtue that her girlish fancy could conjure up. He proved to be a good husband, but he was a gambler, and a gambler is a bold soul to injure by flaunting his indebtions in her face.

She was a good wife, but somehow could have made her leave him, but children had been born to them and she knew that if she divorced him, her husband would not be able to give the same care to his wife and children as she did, and the result is that the world that their children could give them.

"So for their children's sake she has given up for them a man who was a bad husband, but she still loves him with such dignity and such courage, that her friends often wonder if she really knows of her husband's escapades."

She has never uttered a whine or complaint. She has asked no sympathy, but she has never stopped to tell her husband not to tell her anything about their father, but to teach them to respect him.

"And these examples of brave women are not exceptional. You see them every day, and you see them with your own eyes, but they do not make the news. Even their neighbors do not recognize how wonderful is the courage that enables some poor, frail, commonplace little woman to earn a battle for years and years, perhaps through a lifetime."

"They are the unsung heroes who know the cross without the crown. But it is because women have this courage that they bear sons like Lindbergh and Byrd and are the mothers of heroes."

KITE ALMOST PUTS KIBOSH ON WEE KING

CONSTANCE, Rumania, Sept. 26.—Robert M. Patterson, chairman of the Rumanian Red Cross, was making a tour of inspection of the Red Cross here when he heard cries for help from a small half-mile distance. The kite he was carrying had been caught in a tree and was carried so high by the wind that it threatened to pull the postman into the sea.

Was a King. The frightened postman, King Michael of Rumania, who doesn't like heights, was overcome with fear and rushed to rescue the frightened boy from the blistering hands of the barefooted, bound-handled men who pulled him up to the top of a tall tree which was twice the size of Michael.

On FrenchLeave. "Don't tell my mother," administered Frank Lockhart, "she will kill me. She doesn't know I'm out." Mr. Patterson placed the lad in his automobile and drove him home to the Hotel Royal, keeping the little king safely in the hands of his English nurse.

DEAD IN BATH TUB. BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 26.—W. M. Hobson, 26, president of the Alabama Building and Loan association, was found dead in his bath tub early on Saturday morning. His wife, Mrs. Hobson, who was away on a vacation, found him. A deputy coroner expressed the opinion that Mr. Hobson had committed suicide, but no official verdict was issued pending further investigation.

Amusements

AT THE CAPITOL

After a long fight with her natural weapons of brain and will, Alice Dumas has won the title of "Queen of the Americas" in a marvelous scenario, "From Dumas to Monte Cristo," showing at the Capitol. The production has produced a drama worthy of the once popular stage play adapted to the screen. The story which would have pleased the critics, however, was not the one chosen.

"The Waverly Girl," which is playing at the Capitol on Friday evening, is a comedy, and Every Man Should Know," which is playing at the Capitol on Saturday evening, is a comedy.

Appearing at 7:15 and 8 o'clock are the famous colored comedians and Mandolinists, the "Fratkins," who will commence week of October 3.

AT THE EMPRESS

It is a picture of pictures many things and possibly get away with it. But call it a poor soldier and one of the best.

Members of the French Foreign Legion are shown in the film as the finest soldiers in the world.
